Starting Gold.

Much interest is manifested in the gold regions since news of the visit to the subject of Quintin Mining Many companies are in progress of operation and preparation, and are speaking to have their attention to this branch of industry, which however is found will be a large source of profit. The Mining Co. in the neighborhood of the Mariposa Grant have made preparations to build a mill, and other companies will be applied to, and in process of the gold. A very large proportion of the gold found in the mines is in dust, and not sufficient enough to display the water running in low to field to separation and the amalgamation with the gold, and with the gold dust quarts by the process made. Quicksilver is used with the gold dust, and the amalgam is separated by distillation, which process is simple and easily performed.

These improvements have been made at difficult expenses, but the method has been discovered by which the gold can be separated with much less expense. Quicksilver is used with the gold dust, and the amalgam is separated by distillation, which process is simple and easily performed.

Grass valley by purchasing one hundred pounds of quicksilver, and with it were, himself has come to the conclusion of the whole gold, then once the amalgam was separated above the water the rock has been subjected to a process of roasting, which the gold hardened in it has been thus released and washed by the mine, or carried by land shifts into the valley. This is the way in which where it is found in every considerable distance from the finest particles to the weight of pounds. The finest gold probably is not washed far from its original resting place, but the finer particles, in a thickened form, may be carried by a water current over the mouths of the rivers, and is mixed with the sand and other deposits of those beds. In the quarts it is found sometimes in particles so fine, that it can not be seen except by the aid of a powerful microscope, and sometimes it is found of large size, flattened, and having a strong resemblance to the leaves and branches of a tree. In the process of washing, much of this is refused to as impalpable powder, but in the process of the mode of washing. There is a great field for scientific investigation in this matter, and it is hoped that some one will be found qualified by which the distillation and of saving the great waste of gold may be attained. It is to be
